The foundations of the UN's activities and structure were developed during the Second World War by the leading members of the anti-Hitler coalition. The name "United Nations" was first used in the United Nations Declaration, signed on January 1, 1942.

The UN Charter was approved at the San Francisco Conference, which took place from April to June 1945, and signed on June 26, 1945 by representatives of 50 states. On October 15, 1945, Poland also signed the Charter, thus becoming one of the original members of the Organization. Mandatory participation in UN actions to solve the problems that have arisen.

Failure to provide assistance to a state against which the UN has taken coercive measures.

Non-interference in the internal affairs of any State.

1.7. The United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) are a kind of call to action coming from all countries – poor, rich and medium-developed. It aims to improve the well-being and protection of our planet. States recognize that measures to eliminate poverty must be taken in parallel with efforts to boost economic growth and address a range of issues in the fields of education, health, social protection and employment, as well as combating climate change and protecting the environment.

17 goals (SDGs) and 169 targets were formulated in the Sustainable Development Agenda, which was adopted by the UN member States on September 25, 2015. Each of the goals is an important component for the implementation of an ambitious plan aimed at meeting the basic needs of the present.

There can be no sustainable development without peace, just as there can be no peace without sustainable development.

The agenda adopted by the United Nations makes it possible to fully unleash human potential and promote universal prosperity and a world of equal opportunities. The SDGs is not only an action plan for governments and international organizations, it involves the participation of all stakeholders, including civil society and individual citizens. Everyone can become a part of global solidarity and contribute to the prosperity of our planet. Partnership at the international, national and regional levels is important to achieve the goals, therefore, civic initiative is an important element of the global architecture of peace.
